Trump denies new rape accusation: 'She's not my type'

"I'm glad I'm not his type," writer E. Jean Carroll said after the president denied sexually assaulting her.

President Donald Trump denied a recent claim that he raped writer E. Jean Carroll 23 years ago, insisting that she's not his "type."

Carroll is the 22nd woman to publicly accuse the president of sexual assault. Her allegations came to light Friday in New York Magazine, in an excerpt from a forthcoming book. Since then, there has been criticism over the lack of public conversation around the rape claim, with some victims' advocates pointing to the normalization of sexual misconduct.

Carroll, 75, said in the mid-1990s that Trump threw her up against a wall at a dressing room at Bergdorf Goodman in Manhattan so violently that "I hit my head really hard: boom." Carroll said she tried to fight back, but was overpowered.

"I'll say it with great respect," Trump said in an interview with The Hill, that Carroll was "totally lying," and emphatically insisted he didn't know anything about her. "Number 1, she's not my type. Number 2, it never happened. It never happened, OK?"

Trump used a similar defense when smacking down another sexual misconduct claim in 2016. After Jessica Leeds said Trump groped her on a plane in the 1980s, Trump told crowds at a campaign rally that Leeds "would not be my first choice."

He also denied the claims on Saturday, telling media, "People have to be careful, because they're playing with very dangerous territory."

> "Number 1, she's not my type. Number 2, it never happened. It never-ever happened, OK?"
> President Donald Trump

In response to Trump's comments, Carroll told Anderson Cooper in an interview Monday night: "I love that. I am so glad I'm not his type. I'm so glad." Carroll also said on CNN that the president "just went at it" during the alleged attack, pulling down her tights. "It was a fight," she said. Carroll said she told two friends, but didn't report the incident for fear of retribution.

When discussing Trump's denial of myriad sexual assault allegations, Carroll said, "He denies, he turns it around, he threatens and he attacks."

Talk show host Stephen Colbert took aim at the new rape allegation, and the lack of publicity, during his show's opening monologue Monday night, calling the claims "specific," "credible" and "terrible."

The Rape, Abuse & Incest National Network, also known as RAINN, told Metro that since Carroll's account was published, the National Sexual Assault Hotline has seen a 53 percent increase in calls compared to the prior week.

The influx is not uncommon for the organization. Its president, Scott Berkowitz, said, "We generally do see a spike when some story about sexual assault is in the news, but this is higher than we normally see. The biggest we ever saw was the day after the Kavanaugh hearing (338 percent). It was not as big as that, but bigger than around the Cosby verdict (6 percent) and around the Access Hollywood tape (15 percent)."

Bill Cosby appeals 2018 conviction for sex attack

2 Bill Cosby's lawyers on Tuesday appealed his Pennsylvania conviction for drugging and sexually attacking former Temple University administrator Andrea Constand at his home near Philadelphia 15 years ago. Attorneys for the once-beloved American actor and comedian, star of "The Cosby Show," submitted a written appeal of the 2018 guilty verdict to the Pennsylvania Superior Court, calling for either a new trial or dismissal of the conviction altogether. The 348-page document said Cosby, 81, was wrongly convicted on the basis of "flawed, erroneous, and prejudicial rulings" by the trial judge, including allowing testimony from several accusers other than the woman he was charged with assaulting in the case. Cosby was convicted in April 2018 of attacking his onetime friend, Constand, a former women's basketball coach, in his suburban Philadelphia home. REUTERS

San Fran to become first US city to ban e-cig sales

3 San Francisco will become the first major city in the United States to ban the sale of e-cigarettes as officials look to control the rapid uptick in teenage use of nicotine devices made by companies such as Juul Labs Inc. The San Francisco Board of Supervisors approved the ordinance on Tuesday, banning the sale and distribution of e-cigarettes until they have approval from the U.S. Food and Drug Administration. States and cities across the U.S. have already moved to ban flavored e-cigarettes and raise the legal age for purchasing tobacco products to 21, but San Francisco's new approach is the most far-reaching yet. San Francisco City Attorney Dennis Herrera, who spearheaded the ordinance earlier this year, praised the move and said it was necessary because of what he called an "abdication of responsibility" by the FDA in regulating e-cigarettes. Early-morning fire injures 12, including child, in Logan

Officials described the blaze as a "chaotic" scene.

letters@metro.us

An early-morning house fire left 12 people, including a child, injured in what officials called a "chaotic" blaze in Logan at about 4:30 a.m. on Tuesday.

"Many thanks to all our partners who helped on a difficult morning in Logan, where 12 people were injured in a house fire on 12th Street," the Philadelphia Fire Department tweeted. Firefighters stormed the burning home to rescue occupants who were trapped inside. Those injured were rushed to the hospital, where they were listed in critical condition. Fire officials believed that they would recover, and that everyone had made it outside of the home in time.

"When they arrived, they found multiple building occupants out in the street, out in the backyard, people with injuries, people who had jumped. Very chaotic scene when they arrived," Fire Commissioner Adam Thiel told NBC Philadelphia.

It took all of 45 minutes to knock the flames down, but officials called the scene an "all hands" endeavor.

> "When they arrived, they found multiple building occupants out in the street, out in the backyard, people with injuries, people who had jumped. Very chaotic scene when they arrived."
> Fire Commissioner Adam Thiel

Officials were still investigating the cause of the fire, and were to conduct secondary searches for people who may not have escaped the blaze once they'd knocked down any hot spots that might reignite the fire. The fire is said to have started on the first floor, and quickly spread throughout home. Firefighters said that the first floor was "heavily" engulfed in flames when they arrived.

Philly police update their transgender and nonbinary policy

Philly police are making sure that trans and nonbinary folks are comfortable while dealing with the justice systems.

BECCA GLASSER-BAKER
Rebecca.Glasser@metro.us

The Philadelphia Police Department is making huge changes to its transgender and nonbinary policy. Philly's office of LBGTQ affairs shared a post on its website about how it's trying to make the justice system more accommodating to those in the trans and nonbinary communities.

The department shared with Metro that officers must use a person's chosen pronouns and name when interacting with them. Regardless of what it may say on their ID, police want to make sure respectful terminology is used. This includes whether the person they are speaking to is a suspect, arrestee, victim or witness.

One of the things that police want to make clear is that prejudice is not welcome in the department, so much so that it outlines in the policy that "personnel will not exhibit any bias, nor will they prejudge or discriminate against an individual or group of members based on their actual or perceived sexual orientation, gender identity or gender expression."

Additionally, and perhaps in response to a recent Facebook probe, the policy says: "Personnel will not make discourteous or disrespectful remarks regarding another person's actual or perceived race, color, sex, gender, gender identity, gender expression, religious creed, sexual orientation, age, national origin, ancestry or disability."

The department is also making sure officers are being trained to transport trans people who are in custody to the nearest medical facility to address their medical needs, such as hormone therapy. For protection, police are planning to transport trans people separately from other incarcerated people.

This is not the only precaution officers will be taking when it comes to incarcerated trans people. To protect the trans community in jail, and to avoid situations in which individuals can feel threatened, officials said they will place trans arrestees in a "secure single cell."

The policy also outlines how cops are being specially trained for media on how to speak about transgender and nonbinary individuals.

BRIEF

Longtime Trump aide Grisham to become next press secretary

Stephanie Grisham, communications director for first lady Melania Trump and a longtime aide to President Donald Trump, will succeed Sarah Sanders as White House press secretary, Mrs. Trump announced on Tuesday.

Melania Trump announced the development in a tweet to conclude the president's search for a press secretary after Sanders decided to resign and go back home to Arkansas earlier this month.

Grisham, 42, a fixture in the Arizona Republican Party, was one of Trump's first hires for his presidential campaign — as a press aide in 2015.

She served as a deputy press secretary in the White House when he took office in January 2017 and eventually moved over to the first lady's operation, and she has been fiercely loyal to the Trumps.

A clue that the president was leaning toward Grisham for the job was when aides said she had now been added to the White House team going with Trump to the G20 summit in Osaka, Japan, and Seoul, South Korea, this week.

The fact that Mrs. Trump announced the appointment, instead of the president himself, showed that the first lady was willing to part with Grisham for the greater good.

Grisham will have the dual role of press secretary and communications director. Sanders had essentially been doing both roles as well, without the communications director title.

Grisham was viewed internally as the candidate with the best rapport with President Trump, a key requirement. REUTERS

Cardi B pleads not guilty to charges in strip club fight

Grammy Award-winning rapper Cardi B pleaded not guilty on Tuesday to felony assault charges relating to an alleged fight at a New York City strip club last year.

The 26-year-old performer from the Bronx borough of New York City entered the plea in an appearance at New York Supreme Court in the borough of Queens.

"Not guilty, sir, honor," Cardi B, whose real name is Belcalis Almanzar, told the judge during the roughly 30-minute hearing.

As she entered the court building, wearing a navy-blue-and-pink pantsuit and carrying a pink handbag, one fan shouted "Free Cardi B."

The singer, known for chart-topping hits "Bodak Yellow" and "I Like It," waved back with a hand sporting long, pink fingernails, before being ushered into the court by her lawyer and two bodyguards.

The rapper surrendered to New York City police last October after a complaint claimed she was involved in a fight at the Angels NYC strip club in Queens.

"I ain't going to jail, I got a daughter," she declared near the end of her Los Angeles concert on Saturday.

Cardi B was indicted by a grand jury on felony charges earlier this month along with two other individuals in her entourage.

According to police, the rapper got into an argument in August with two of the club's female bartenders. She had accused one of them of having an affair with her husband Offset, a member of the rap trio Migos, according to local media.

> "I ain't going to jail, I got a daughter."
> Cardi B

"The victims allegedly had glass bottles hurled at them, alcoholic drinks thrown in their faces and one woman's head was slammed into the bar," Acting Queens District Attorney John Ryan said in a statement. "This kind of violence won't be tolerated in our community."

Cardi B left the Queens court on Tuesday by a side door, wearing a somber expression, briefly waving to fans before she got in a black SUV without speaking to press. Her lawyer, Jeff Kern, did not respond to a request for comment.

Her latest single, "Press," is currently at 60 on the Billboard Hot 100 chart. Cover art for the single, in which she says "Cardi don't need more press," shows her naked and being escorted out of a building as older, male photographers push toward her.

The next hearing in the case will be on Sept. 23 for co-defendants Tawana Jackson-Morel, 36, and Jeffrey Bush, 34, both of Brooklyn.

In an indictment made public Tuesday, Queens prosecutors claimed that Cardi B and Jackson-Morel used social media to coordinate an Aug. 15 attack on a 21-year-old bartender and discussed money payments to people who carried it out.

Several unapprehended females also assaulted the bartender, while Bush filmed the attack, according to the prosecutors.

Cardi B and Jackson-Morel took part in another attack on Aug. 29 targeting the bartender's 23-year-old sister, also a bartender at the club, the prosecutors said.

If convicted, the three defendants face up to four years in prison.

Trump threatens 'obliteration,' Iran calls White House 'mentally retarded'

The president last week called off an airstrike at the last minute.

President Donald Trump threatened on Tuesday to obliterate parts of Iran if it attacked "anything American," in a new war of words with Iran, which condemned the latest U.S. sanctions on Tehran and called White House actions "mentally retarded."

Trump on Monday signed an executive order imposing largely symbolic economic sanctions against Iranian Supreme Leader Ayatollah Ali Khamenei and other senior figures, with punitive measures against Foreign Minister Mohammad Javad Zarif expected later this week.

Iran shot down a U.S. drone last week and Trump said he had called off a retaliatory airstrike with minutes to spare, saying too many people would have been killed. It would have been the first time the United States had bombed the Islamic Republic in four decades of mutual hostility.

Iran's Supreme Leader Ayatollah Ali Khamenei. REUTERS

In rhetoric similar to the kind of harsh words he used to aim at North Korea, Trump tweeted: "Any attack by Iran on anything American will be met with great and overwhelming force. In some areas, overwhelming will mean obliteration."

In a televised address on Tuesday, Iranian President Hassan Rouhani said the new sanctions against Khamenei would have no practical impact because the top cleric had no assets abroad.

Rouhani, a pragmatist who won two elections on promises to open Iran up to the world, said the White House's actions were "mentally retarded" — an insult that other Iranian officials have used in the past about Trump, but a departure from Rouhani's own comparatively measured tone over the years.

"Tehran's strategic patience does not mean we have fear," said Rouhani, who with his cabinet runs Iran's day-to-day affairs while Khamenei, in power since 1989, is the country's ultimate authority.

ESCALATING U.S. SANCTIONS

The United States has imposed crippling financial sanctions against Iran since last year when Trump withdrew from a 2015 deal between Tehran and world powers under which Iran curbed its nuclear program.

Tension has escalated sharply since last month, when the Trump administration tightened its sanctions noose, ordering all countries to halt purchases of Iranian oil.

That has effectively starved the Iranian economy of the main source of revenue Tehran uses to import food for its 81 million people, and left the pragmatic wing of Iran's leadership, led by Rouhani, with no benefits to show for its nuclear agreement.

Trump says the accord reached under his predecessor Barack Obama was a failure because its terms were not permanent and did not cover security issues beyond the nuclear program, such as missiles and role in various Middle East conflicts. REUTERS

Border agency head quits amid outcry

The acting commissioner of the U.S. Customs and Border Protection (CBP) agency, John Sanders, is resigning and will leave his post on July 5, the agency said on Tuesday, a move that coincides with an outcry over the treatment of detained migrant children.

The relocation of 250 migrant children from an overcrowded Texas border-patrol station, where they were held for weeks in squalid conditions without adequate food and water, has stepped up criticism from immigration activists and Democrats of Republican President Donald Trump's hardline immigration policies.

The New York Times first reported that Sanders was resigning. Sanders has led the agency since April, when Trump reshuffled the management of U.S. immigration agencies under the Department of Homeland Security.

Dealing with a surge of migrants at the U.S.-Mexico border has been a priority for Trump but the president has proven unable to push most of his goals through Congress.

On Tuesday, U.S. House Democrats said they plan to approve $4.5 billion in emergency funding to address the crisis caused by the migrant surge, but the measure has drawn a veto threat from Trump. REUTERS

Think Pynk

Yards Brewing Company's Pynk Affair is this weekend.

MOLLY GIVEN
Molly.Given@metro.us

Some of you may have red, white and blue on your mind with the 4th of July right around the corner, but this weekend Yards Brewing Company wants you to think Pynk. The local brewery's Pynk Affair is this Sunday, and the extravaganza promises to be one of the most colorful and exciting events of the whole summer.

Head to Yards' Spring Garden street location this weekend where they will be opening their brewery, warehouse and backyard parking lot to join in on all of the Pynk-filled fun. The Pynk Affair will highlight Yards' wildly popular Pynk sparkling tart berry ale which is now available year round. Before, Philadelphians could only enjoy the refreshing brew seasonally in the summer, and now Yards is officially keeping Pynk on the menu throughout the fall, winter and spring---- an announcement definitely worth celebrating.

A portion of proceeds from the Pynk Affair will also benefit Yards' local charity partners, the Tyanna Foundation and Twist Out Cancer. According to a release, Yards has raised nearly $50,000 for the Tyanna Foundation since Pynk was first bottled seasonally in 2013. Now that Pynk is available year-round, Yards has pledged to raise at least $10,000 annually through Pynk sales and special events, like the Pynk Affair, and hopes to raise much more.

Guests can sip on the fresh fruit beer at the event on draft, in 12oz bottles or 12oz. cans, or even try the ale in a specialty cocktail made with Philadelphia Distilling's Blue Coat gin. For guests who want something a little different, check out the shaded pop-up beer garden for more enticing Yards options. Guests can also indulge in incredible treats from Federal Donuts and Little Baby's Ice Cream while relaxing in the beer garden as well as other tasty choices.

Pynk is now available in 12 oz. cans. ALL PHOTOS PROVIDED

Non-alcoholic options will also be available including draft lattes from La Colombe.

The event will not only have plenty of treats for your taste-buds but for your eyes as well. Guests can witness art coming to life by the popular creative group Tiny Room for Elephants, plus there will also be local musicians such as Queen of Jeans and Magglezzz providing live entertainment, and incredible aerial performers high in the sky offering a truly exciting experience.

The Yards Pynk Affair will also feature a raffle with enticing prizes from American Mortals, Philadelphia Distilling, Philadelphia Museum of Art, COOK, the Philadelphia Phillies, the Philadelphia Union, Franklin Music Hall and plenty more.

Tickets also include behind-the-scenes access to Yards' brewery and warehouse for the afternoon.

Yards wants the Pynk Affair to celebrate their delicious brew and fun space, but they also want the city to party with a purpose. The Tyanna Foundation is dedicated to improving the lives of breast cancer patients and Twist Out Cancer provides psychosocial support to cancer survivors and their loved ones through creative arts programming. Attending the Pynk Affair or purchasing Pynk will help keep their mission going.

It all starts with the truth

The Kunhardt's directed HBO's new jaw-dropping documentary, "True Justice: Bryan Stevenson's Fight For Equality"

MOLLY GIVEN
Molly.Given@metro.us

The Kunhardts with Bryan Stevenson.

Emmy Award-winning documentary filmmakers Peter, George and Teddy Kunhardt are known for taking sensitive subject matter to the next level by bringing the truth to light.

The truth is a tricky subject often hard to hear, but the Kunhardts are warriors of educating and informing the world on earnest messages that need to be heard. That rings eerily true with their latest documentary, "True Justice: Bryan Stevenson's Fight For Equality" (premiering June 26). The new HBO film highlights Stevenson's endless fight to advocate for the poor, the incarcerated and the condemned through an unjust and morally corrupt justice system. The Kunhardts sat down with Metro to discuss their latest film, delve into why Stevenson's story is so compelling and highlight why we all must learn the truth about our country's history before it repeats itself.

When did you first hear about Bryan Stevenson and what motivated you to make this documentary centered around his work?

GK: The three us watched Bryan's Ted Talk back in 2012, and once we watched that and saw his charisma and his energy and his message--- we knew that he would be an amazing person to do a film on and spend a couple of years working with. It took a long time to get him to approve the project and to get him to come with us. In 2016, our brother who is the Executive Director of the Gordon Parks Foundation honored Bryan with a prestigious award there, and that's where we got to meet him for the first time. From then on, we just kept asking him to do a project, and he saw our "King in the Wilderness" film and loved it--- so everything just fell into place.

TK: I would add that when we heard him speak for the first time in real life--- there's a true magic to him and we all simultaneously turned to each other and we just said we need to get this guy to tell his story. We've become very careful about who we do a film on, we know we have to live with these subjects for a year and a half. So we're very careful that we are picking someone we respect and admire and who can fall under the banner of moral leadership.

PK: Moral leadership is kind of a trait that makes for good storytelling and [resonates with] audiences. That was certainly a criterion that Bryan met.

While working on the film and knowing the unjust nature of our justice system, was there anything that truly shocked you?

TK: You know we were very privileged to have had an amazing education growing up--- but never during the course of my history classes did I learn about convict leasing. Bryan's narrative of the North won the Civil War, but the South won the narrative meaning slavery didn't end, it just evolved. That to me was jaw-dropping that we weren't taught that in school.

PK: Bryan is well known for his work with getting people off death row who are wrongly convicted or badly convicted. That's a good portion of the film, but the other portion of the film is his insight into the country's history and how slavery didn't just end, it evolved and transformed into other forms. It exists today in the racial undertones. Bryan is also working on trying to realize why we still are where we are in the race situation. On the other end, if you don't have the resources to defend yourself, the system is loaded against you.

GK: One of the lines Bryan says is it's easier to be rich and guilty than poor and innocent. That's as evident as possible with what Bryan talks about and with what we see in the film.

What steps do you think need to be taken to help change the system?

PK: I think education is the first step. Messages like Bryan Stevenson's message and truth-telling about what really is going on in this country just hasn't taken place yet. Truth-telling is something the next generations have got to not only hear about, but grow up believing it. It all begins with the truth, this is all just the very beginning.

TK: And being willing to go and listen to the truth. Bryan talks a bit about the Holocaust and how it's a part of Germany's history, you can't go ten feet without seeing a marker--- it's part of their culture.

What do you hope audiences will take away from "True Justice: Bryan Stevenson's Fight For Equality"

GK: I hope people watch the film, have conversations with their friends and family, and hopefully make the trek down to Alabama to see the museum and the lynching memorial because there is a whole different life about it when you're physically there.

TK: This is just getting the conversation started. Ava [Duvernay] did it with the "13th" and Kenny Turan just did an LA Times review and he said that this is the next chapter of that film. We have to keep the conversation alive and teach the next generation this brutal history so it doesn't repeat itself and so we can start to repair the damage that was done.

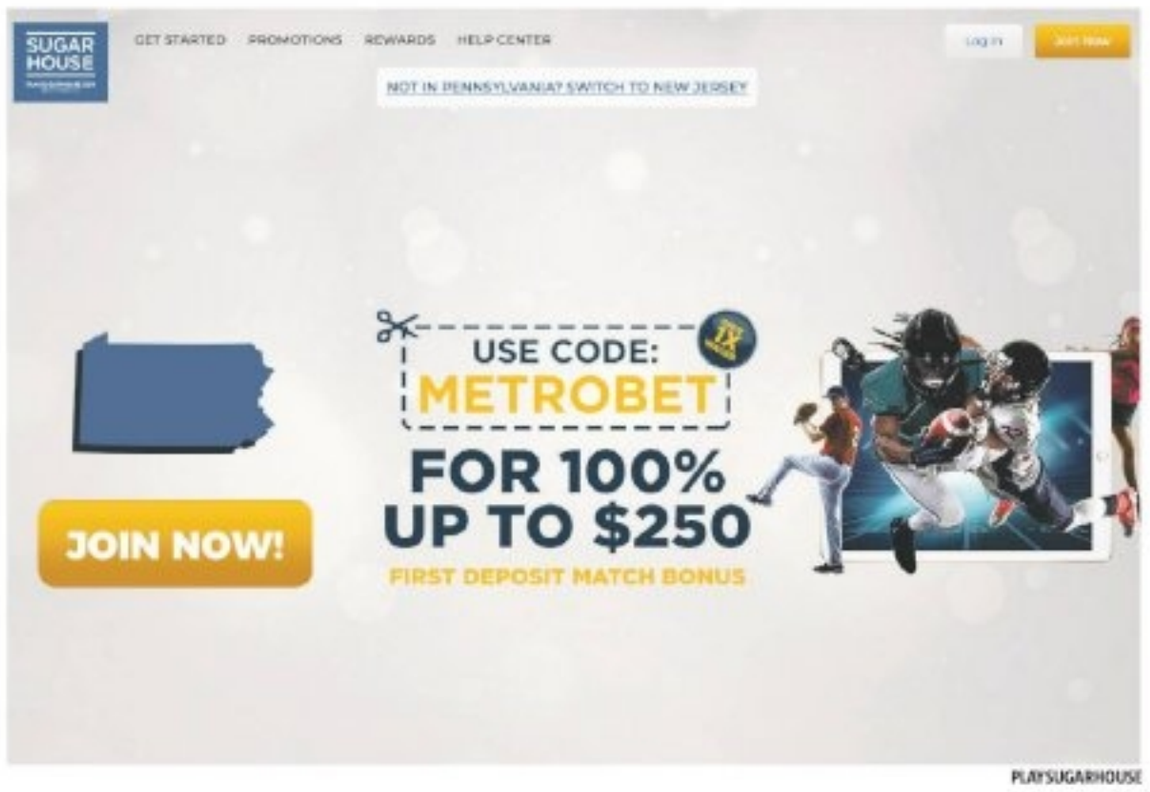
Sports betting 101: What is 'vig'?

SugarHouse Casino's sportsbook manager dishes out the basics of sports betting.

JIM LLEWELLYN

Jim Llewellyn is the sportsbook manager at SugarHouse Casino.



PLAYSUGARHOUSE

We've gone over a good amount of sports betting terminology in this space, but one we haven't covered is "vig" (short for "vigorish"). Vig is also sometimes called "juice" by bettors.

The vig refers to what sportsbooks charge the bettor for making a wager. Consider the vig an operations fee or a commission for giving guests the chance to wager with the business. In a perfect world with perfect lines, half of the total amount wagered would land on each side of the bet and the book would be happy to keep only the vig, which is similar to the commission the dealer takes from the "pot" in poker.

The typical vig you will see on a game is -110, which means the bettor can win $1 for every $1.10 bet. For instance, if you go to the SugarHouse Casino Sportsbook at MetroBet.us/Sugar, you will see that the Week 1 NFL odds for nearly every team in every game has a -110 vig attached to their respective points spread.

First-time bettors will often scoff at the vig, thinking that they're getting ripped off by the sportsbook. But sportsbooks can often get hammered, losing millions of dollars in just one day.

Remember that classic shootout between the Los Angeles Rams and Kansas City Chiefs last fall on Monday Night Football?

One sportsbook company reported a "seven-figure loss" because 69 percent of bettors wagered on the Over of that one game. The Over/Under (total) was originally set at 64, but the two teams combined for an incredible 105 points (a 54-51 final).

Sportsbooks, like bettors, have bad days, too. In other words, there's a good reason for the vig.

To bet now, go to MetroBet.us/Sugar and get up to $250 in a first-deposit match bonus.

Phillies vs. Mets game pick

The New York Mets and Philadelphia Phillies have been wont to play high-scoring games this season, and it looks like that trend won't be bucked on Wednesday night as New York's Jason Vargas (3-3, 3.75 ERA) squares off with Philadelphia's Nick Pivetta (4-2, 5.54 ERA). In seven meetings this year, the Phillies and Mets are averaging 10.14 runs per contest. Vargas' 4.65 road ERA this year contrasts sharply with his 2.79 ERA at Citi Field. Opponents are batting just .202 off Vargas in Queens but .268 everywhere else.

To bet on this game now and receive up to $250 in free deposit match bonus money go to MetroBet.us/Sugar and use promo code METROBET.

Pivetta has pitched to a 6.23 ERA in his last six starts against the Mets (30 1/3 innings). His batting average against at Citizens Bank Park this year (six starts) is .308. New York's bats are hot right now, as they're averaging 5.5 runs per game over their last 10 contests.

The Over is 10-3-1 in the Mets' last 14 games. Also, the Over is 16-5 in the Phillies' last 21 home games against a left-handed starter.

NFL betting previews: Finding value

MATT BURKE

Matt Burke is a veteran sports journalist and the Founder and Editor in Chief of MetroBet.

Get excited, Philly! Legal online sports betting has finally arrived and you can bet from the comfort of your couch right now with MetroBet!

The Bengals finally bid farewell to head coach Marvin Lewis after 16 years and brought in 35-year-old Zac Taylor to help guide them from endless mediocrity into a true contender.

The sports betting public is not too optimistic about Taylor being able to do so, however, as right now at MetroBet.us/Sugar they are tied with the Cardinals and Dolphins for having the worst odds at winning the most games in the NFL this season at a whopping +30000. They are +600 to win the "least amount of games" at MetroBet.us/Sugar (promo code METROBET).

Crazy as it may sound, the Bengals may be worth taking a flier on. Taylor was an assistant the past two years under another head coach wunderkind, Sean McVay. Two years ago, McVay took over the Rams from Jeff Fisher (who wore out his welcome over the better part of a decade, much like Lewis did) and immediately turned a seemingly mediocre roster into a bona fide title contender. The Rams were 4-12 in 2016 under Fisher (and interim head coach John Fassel), and then went 11-5 in McVay's first year. Last year, the Rams made another leap — earning the best record in the NFL with a 13-3 mark.

GETTY IMAGES

Of course, the odds that Taylor is McVay 2.0 are low. When does lightning ever strike twice in these types of scenarios, after all?

But again, it wouldn't hurt to put a buck or two on the Bengals right now at MetroBet.us/Sugar and you could wind up looking like a genius six months from now. With +30000 odds on a $2 bet, you could win $600. A $10 bet would get you a $3,010 payout.

The odds of this happening are far better than the odds of you winning the lottery on a $2 ticket.

All told, Cincinnati's roster is far from ghastly. They still have excellent skill position players in AJ Green, Tyler Boyd and Joe Mixon.

You can bank on Green having a monster bounceback season under a new, offensive-minded head coach in Taylor. The fact that Green is also entering his contract year doesn't hurt either.

To bet on the Bengals or any NFL futures now, go to MetroBet.us/Sugar and receive up to a $250 free deposit match bonus by using the exclusive promo code METROBET.

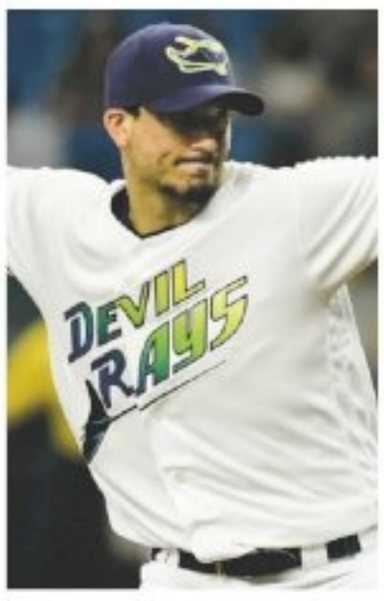
MLB best bets: Rays at Twins

MetroBet takes a glance at one of the more bet-friendly games on the MLB slate for Wednesday.

The Rays' Charlie Morton (8-1, 2.31 ERA) and the Twins' Jake Odorizzi (10-3, 2.58 ERA) have been two of the American League's best starters this season, and their respective home/road splits present even more compelling evidence that this game will go below the total.

Morton has done some of his best work on the road for the Rays this year, going 5-0 in nine starts with a 1.57 ERA. His opponent batting average in those efforts is a scant .178. The New Jersey native held the Twins to two runs in seven innings of work on May 30 at Tropicana Field. The Under is 19-7 in Tampa's last 26 road games and 5-2 in the last seven road games where Morton starts.

Odorizzi has put up impeccable numbers at Target Field this year, going 6-0 in seven starts with a 1.91 ERA and opponent batting average of .190.



In his lone start against his former team this year, the Illinois-born right-hander competed six shutout innings while allowing just three hits. The Under is 5-1-1 in Odorizzi's last seven starts at home.

The play: Rays vs. Twins Under

PHILS' HR-ONLY STRATEGY IS KILLING THEM

THE SPORTS PROFESSOR

GLEN MACNOW

@RealGlenMacnow

General Manager Matt Klentak of the Philadelphia Phillies. ALL GETTY IMAGES

The Phillies' June swoon has been abetted by countless factors: a flimsy rotation, relievers tossing gas on every fire, injuries, a tissue-thin bench, downright laziness and an overmatched manager who declares he will "deal with authority" against those who don't hustle — and then does nothing.

I could fill this fine newspaper with a list of their sins. My editors can't give me enough space.

So instead, I'll focus on just one: the inane strategy that wins and loses games based entirely on home runs. In this case, mostly loses.

The Phils, like many current teams, have altered their offensive approach in recent years to one of "three true outcomes": walks, strikeouts and home runs. Strikeouts are no longer a red badge of shame. Witness that 13 of the 17 position players they've used this season strike out more than 20 percent of the time.

Home runs are the supposed panacea for all ills. Never mind trying to beat the shift by going the other way; let's swing from the feet and try to launch Mr. Rawlings onto Ashburn Alley. A nice gapper splitting the middle in a close game? Hell, no. Not when we can aim for a 100 mph exit-velocity parabola toward the Delaware River.

The problem with home runs is that both teams tend to hit them. In this case, the team facing the Phils' pitching staff hits a lot more. While Rhy Hoskins, Bryce Harper and Co. blasted 91 homers, the guys in red pinstripes have coughed up a lusty 129.

That puts this staff on pace to allow 271 dingers, which would be an all-time MLB worst, except that the pathetic Orioles will beat them to that dubious record. Baltimore's pitchers are on pace to allow 324 souvenir balls. As I said, the game has changed.

If you can't outbash your opponents, you must find other ways to beat them. This is where GM Matt Klentak and manager Gabe Kapler have failed. I'm no fan of the old bunt-'em-over small ball, but there is a time for strategy beyond grip and rip.

Through 77 games, this team has a paltry 26 stolen bases. That projects to 55 for the entire season — their lowest team total in 46 seasons. They never attempt to hit and run, they can't hit behind the runner, and no Phillie ever tries shortening up with two strikes to simply poke one over the infield.

Last week, St. Louis's Matt Carpenter conquered the Marlins shift by bunting down the third-base line and cruising into second with a double. When's the last time you saw one of Gabe's pull-happy lefty hitters show the brains to do that? It's as if they consider it unmanly.

Good players — and smart managers — find their way out of slumps by being creative. The only ingenuity Kapler has shown recently was throwing his hitters' names in a hat and pulling out a lineup that features Harper and Hoskins batting 1-2.

To the manager's credit, both sluggers hit homers over the weekend. To his discredit, the offense created just 15 runs in its seven-game losing streak heading into Monday night's series opener against the Mets.

Blame the players first, that's fair. And more than Kapler, blame the organizational mindset that cheapens every strategy beyond swinging as hard as you can.

The Phillies aren't alone in transforming Major League Baseball into beer-league softball. But they don't currently have the talent to win this way.

And they obviously don't have the creativity to try something else.

Manager Gabe Kapler.
